*ex J.J. Cullimore Allen (author of the book Sovereigns of the British Empire, London 1965), sold at Spink Auction Sale 90 (March 1992, lot 334) as 'The Property of a Lady'.

Reputedly the second finest known, this piece was considered to be the finest known, until a few years ago when one surfaced in extremely fine condition and was sold at auction. It currently resides in a collection in the U.S.A and is valued at around £150,000. We have only handled one other piece a few years ago in about fine. This was sold in excess of £30,000. There are a couple of other specimens; one mounted and one pierced. This is the best piece currently available and will doubtless be highly sought after.

This is most unusual as there appears to be an extra stop (die flaw) by the base of the 2.

- 361 George III, imitation sovereign, 1820, laur. head r., rev. St. George and the dragon (cf. S.3785C), almost uncirculated £350-400

Most unusual, and the first contemporary forgery we have seen. It weighs only 5.25 gms. (gold?) and would undoubtedly have deceived people at the time.
